The 2018 Stock 1000 champion Andrew Lee got his 2019 season off to a flying start with a win in Sunday's race. The Northern Californian is defending his title aboard his No. 1 Franklin Armory/Graves Kawasaki, and he stalked second-place finisher Michael Gilbert, who led the majority of the race on his Team Norris Racing Kawasaki until Lee made his decisive move and took the checkers. MESA37 Racing's Stefano Mesa came in third, making it a Kawasaki podium sweep.

The same podium finishers in Saturday's Twins Cup race were again on the podium in Sunday's race, and Quarterley Racing Ducati rider Michael Barnes was the race winner for the second day in a row. Barnes once again showed that experience (age) is the secret to success as he had the measure of his competitors. Defending class champ Chris Parrish improved on his Saturday third-place result by finishing second on Sunday aboard his Ghetto Customs Suzuki, and RBOM Racing's Curtis Murray rounded out the podium in third.
